“Suicide is a tough topic in Alaska… Increasingly, Alaskans are starting to talk about it, to bring the despair out from its quiet, pained darkness and into the light. “– Craig Medred, Alaska Dispatch News

August 7, 2017 – (New York, NY) – Suicide is one of the leading causes of death for Alaska Natives. Almost every family has lost brothers, sisters, parents, and children to it. How does a community break free from family histories of trauma and suicide to create hope for the next generation?

WE BREATHE AGAIN, the debut feature documentary directed by Marsh Chamberlain, will have its national television broadcast premiere on AMERICA REFRAMED on Tuesday, September 26, 2017, at 8 p.m. on WORLD Channel (check local listings). The documentary series is dedicated to highlighting intimate stories by emerging and veteran filmmakers who are chronicling an ever-changing America.

Programmed in connection with Suicide Prevention Awareness Month, WE BREATHE AGAIN introduces viewers to four Alaska Native people, each confronting the impacts of intergenerational trauma and suicide. Alaska has one of the highest rates of suicide per capita in the country.

Youth who are exposed to suicide or suicidal behaviors are more at-risk for attempting suicide. More than 90 percent of people who die by suicide have had depression or another diagnosable, treatable mental or substance-abuse disorder, according to the American Association of Suicidology. (Source: Department of Health and Social Services, Alaska.gov) The film, a frank meditation on loss, leads to a journey of healing and discovery through the stories of Eddie, Paul, Jody and Keggulluk. Their truths reveal painful past experiences while conveying their hopes for the future. “Sometimes the darker days of your childhood have real long-lasting effects,” says Jody, a suicide survivor. “There’s something about suicide that just tears your heart out.”

For millennia, Alaska Native people thrived in the seasonally harsh conditions of life in the far north, dependent upon strong social, cultural and spiritual practices passed from generation to generation. These are values that Keggulluk, a village elder and survivor, shares with youth through workshops, discussions, and cultural retreats. At the Inupiaq Leadership Conference, he encourages teens to reflect and asks, “How many of you realize your ancestors fought, lived, and died just to give you the chance to have it better than they did? Keggulluk emphasizes, “…we are their descendants... You are their descendants. Persistence—not giving up in the face of adversity, especially in the moment, the heat of the moment when it means and matters the most. You don’t back down. You don’t give up. All you have to do is be who you are.”

In the last century, rapid and forced changes in the daily lives of Alaska Native peoples created complex, painful scars for elders who experienced them and for their children and their children’s children, like Eddie. Through penning hip-hop lyrics, Eddie channels his angst to connect with and inspire other young people. But, can this help him break through a cycle of pain and violence as he strives to overcome his own anger and suicidal thoughts to be a good husband and father?

WE BREATHE AGAIN offers an intimate, authentic portrait of people working to pass on to future generations their communities’ ancestral legacy, strength and resilience.
